Into the slum home of the Brown's there came one day a new horror-nomely, sickness. Poverty milling that had hom accustomed weining they had been accustomed 66 for many years, but so far they had been free from any serious sickness in the hone. Considering the insentiary condition of the phace and the odds and ends they managed to exist on, it is a wonder them all away long ago. But the disadvantages every member of the family enjoyed splendid health. An illness was a contingency they thad neither forescen are provided for. And so when it come and the head of the house was stricken

Mr. Brown hod taken a had chill at one of his prize fights. Neglecting to eare for himself, asthmo had in His drunken habits had undermined his constitution and madormined his constitution and sect him in a pretty had shape to fight off onything of this sort. So now he lay in his wretched home fighting his last fight with the grim enomy—Death. It was a fight in which he was to get a knockout

The profession of prize fighting, attended as it is with so many vices, is not conducive to the atsvices, is not conducive to the at-tainment of an honorable old age, whatever the advocates of the "annly art" may say about it. Two exprise fighters, once mon of note in their line, were recently sent to the workhouse by a New York magistrate. Both had been exports and both bid wer the ny-plause of the sporting frateraity-in, the days of their strength and fitness. Both were laid low by the vices securized in the nurseit as vices ecquired in the pursuit of their profession. This prize fight-ing promotes nothing but viciousand we do not see how any right-minded person could possibly be a patron of it. Sconer or later the devotees of the sport learn that the way of the transgressor is hard. It was so with Mr. Brown, and no at was so while are brown, and no doubt as he lay holpless and affering on his sick bed the thought would force itself upon him that the might have lived a better life.

But if he was ever troubled with such thoughts he was not moved to penitence thereby, for he would rave about what he called his ill link and curse the fate that had brought him to such a pass. The parson came to visit him once, but very presence seemed to anger

Our chapter on this subject would not be complete if mention were not made of the fact that it is possible to seek the blessing of boliness from unworthy motives. Murray McCheyne saw the peril of sections a higher experience for notoriety—to establish a reputation for sauctity—he mentions how he Falt the necessity of against this. Of all makely things there is surely nothing more loathsome in the sight of God than a desize to be reputed saintly for the eredit of the thing. A second danger is the desire for prominence mong thuse who are eminently, useful. Some seek a higher life in the home of becoming the Moodys and Spingeons of their day and generation. They seek fame and popularity to augment their awn importance. Others have in view the delicious cestusy which it will bring. Their desire is to be happy—the exhibitation, the rapture of the life is the object of their quest. They seek the gift, not the Giver. These are all subtle forms of selfseeking. The desire for a fuller life must rise from a loftier motive. It must centre in God. He must be sought for His own worthiness. The attraction must be the incomparable beauty of His character, not any mere gift at His disposal. To glorify His must be our aim, perfect identity of interest with Christ, not personal enjoyment or Thus soith the Lord reputation. The Easter Cry for 1012 is, in some respects, ahead of any pre-vious Easter number published in this country. It is specially What Does Easter Mean to You?

The Front Page.

Shows a young musician playing on a cornet that inspiring Easter hymn, so dear to all Salvationists, "Up from the Grave He Arose." It is a charming picture, ie the litte of the large two-page picture. This is an allractive illustration that will sharm all who look on it. The dear little children in unconventional attitudes, and care free altire, gaze delightedly at the lumbling, running, darting poultry so anxious to get the corn.

In the background is a delightful view of the lake, the scenic setting comprises dalsy-studded grass, a characteristic chicken house, trees, barn and a picture gauge fence. A picture to give le one of the principal pictures. It shows a Salvation Army lassie officer kneeling in a prison cell praying with a woman in prison garb—a modern penitent thief. The figures are well drawn. and the cell, drawn from an actual prison cell, shows that punshment for crime has travelled a considerable distance along the right road since the days of John Howard and Elizabeth Fry.

Japanese Famine Cirls.

One of the most remarkable and interesting photographs we have ever published is that of a group of Japanese Famine girls, congregated outside of The Army Servants' Home in Tokyo. It is a fine collection of types, the whale eneased in a dainty pen and ink border of Japanese character.

There are numerous other pictures, sketches and portraits truth, but with the exactifude of the things that happead, scattered throughout the literary pages.

READING MATTER.
